Tomato Institute: Nearly 300 growers and other industry representatives participated in the 2018 UF/IFAS Florida Tomato Institute last week in Naples. SWFREC vegetable pathologist Dr. Pam Roberts oversaw the program, center director Dr. Kelly Morgan provided opening remarks, and food science agent Matt Krug served as a session moderator. In addition, two SWFREC faculty members spoke at the conference: weed scientist Dr. Ramdas Kanissery (“Herbicide Phytotoxicity in Tomatoes : Prevention and Rescue”) and natural resource economist Dr. Tara Wade (“The Electronic Logging Devices (ELDs) Mandate and Hours of Service (HOS) for Production Haulers”).

SWFREC Annual Report: In response to requests for information regarding programs at the UF/IFAS Southwest Florida Research and Education Center, director Dr. Kelly Morgan plans to produce a center annual report in the spring of each year. These reports will enable center administration to better inform our growers about the important research being conducted by our faculty and staff.
